Aloha LoveTribe!

We are continuing our New Years' Sale and it will go into our semi-annual sale in a little over a week.

Everything is an additional 20-50% off our regularly discounted prices.

For our LoveTribe (you!) we will be offering an additional 10% off your entire purchase with the password: LoveTribe

In addition to an abundance of Johnny Was and Biya, plus all the other wonderful lines we carry ... we brought in a great selection of NoBlu! You can see a few pics below.

The design above for tomorrow's Women's March, of women, strength, diversity and choosing love, was created by my daughter Shaye. We have 20 mounted on foam board, to give away (mostly in Berkeley but a few at the Point, sorry none in Ashland), so you're welcome to come in and pick one up if you're marching. You can also use this artwork and print your own. A few are already on their way to Washington!

I had to think/feel how I wanted to participate. I want to be for, not against. And I feel that is the opportunity for us all now. To be fearless by choosing love. Trump is the outgrowth of a world wide adjustment. Waking people up (getting our heads out of the sand), from just going through the motions of life, "getting by", to arousing our passion for life. Who are we? What brings us joy, satisfaction? How can we create a beautiful world and life? I saw the gleam in so many of my activist friends' eye, when Trump was elected ... ready to fight the good fight. And if we can fight for love, inclusion, safety, equality, respect, health ... for all (that means the entire shabang ... earth, insects, animals) all our relations ("it's all relatives"), not fighting against those with different beliefs or voices we can't hear, languages we don't understand. OK, I'm an eternal optimist (yet no stranger from life's pains), so with that admitted, I feel being a victim or seeing others as victims is very dis-empowering to our strength and ability to manifest good.

This is our time to rise, sing, dance in the awareness of our oneness and choose love. xox Devi
