Happy Lunar/Chinese New Year! I started off this new year day staying in bed until I felt like getting up (one of my favorite pastimes). I'm now sitting at my desk, eating oatmeal I made just for myself, drinking a special brew, looking out my office window onto the miraculous view of the Golden Gate Bridge and the beautiful bay, small boats in the water, clouds, trees and jotting this down to share with you. I'm starting the first day of this new year with self care and loving myself.

Self care has become a trend which is beautiful in itself but I think we start to forget the fullness of what that means. My daughter Shaye calls that fullness, together care. Taking care of each other. Here are some of her thoughts on this: "We forget that even the "hard" stuff, the struggle, is the flip side... nay.. is merely the love. The rough side of love. Self care, the way I see it, is being vulnerable with the people and situations we love and trusting they will hear you and take care. That they will help you take care of yourself as you help them take care of their self. Can we say how we feel and what we need and have the people around us figure out how to make that happen ... together? If not, can we grow into that together or do we need to take space from each other and grow on our own. This is self care. Of course that includes quiet, long mornings in bed and candle lit baths, don't get me wrong! But when those extra challenges hit, like running a small woman owned business in an ultra patriarchal corporatocracy, or when loved ones become ill, we need to start looking at self care in a deeper way. As together care."

And loving ourselves completely. You know those things you don't love about yourself? Yep, that's what needs loving. When we truly love ourselves we are free. Free from proving ourselves, free from judging of ourselves (or others), free from needing to be right (or making another wrong), free from fear of making mistakes (yep, we will make them!). February has become a "hallmark" month of love ... lets have the miracle of true love, self love and together love be our 2020 Valentine.

In our *involution ... our journey into loving the "/ of us" or the ALL of us, we will learn to love ourselves. And we will learn true "together care".

Happy New Year! Miracles a plenty in 2020.
