Memorial Day ...

I dream of a day (unlikely in our lifetime), when the past and current stage of humanity that is "dis-membered", is just a memory. As our perceived division dissolves into the awareness of our oneness.

As I see it, we (humanity) are in a time, age, yuga where we have been searching for and developing our individual identities and forgot we are also one. Unless you grew up in a culture with the awareness of "all my relations". Or had a mom like me whose religion was love.

Dear LoveTribe,

I'm writing from our family farm in Washington, where we are blessed to be this week. There

I honor those that have been on the forefront, of what I see as a rite of passage, with its pain and horrors, it's bravery and stupidities (misguided actions). I honor those who have had are amazing gardens, sustainable forestry and family.

the courage to fight in and the courage to say no to ... war.

Kobe is in heaven and his interest in military games disappeared as amazing chores like power washing tree poles for milling, foraging for lunch and long walks through forest trails.

Although there are still family dynamics to work out in order to enjoy this beauty. Which we do through respectful understanding, by listening to and speaking from whats true for each person, with the shared goal of finding a way to heal ourselves and harmonize.

This memorial day we are in a heightened time of awareness of conflict and a wishing for and standing up for, peace.

May the conflicts ease and compassion grow in Sudan, Palestine, the Congo, Yemon, Ukraine, Myanmar and the many other conflicts including the division in this country and in our communities and families.

And as our awareness grows, may we find healthier ways to heal, grow and come together ... for the good of all ... the I of Us.

However you honor this day, enjoy!

Being Fearless - Choosing Love xoxo Devi
