Aloha LoveTribe,

Big 4th st sidewalk sale this weekend ... but will it be rained out? Not tomorrow but maybe our racks will be inside Sunday.
 And well have lots of great deals to share!

Just like this moody, unpredictable weather of a changing season, my mood seems to mirror it. I do an experiment and think happy thoughts (ala Peter Pan) and the sun shines through the clouds. Did I just make that happen, or synchronicity strikes again?!

That happy thought was of a time in Maui when I went to Hana for a month of a solo silent retreat just before finding our garden paradise there.

I was trekking my favorite trail through the bamboo forest, just me and nature, no one else. I was coming down from the summit waterfall – gorgeous, by the way – as it was getting late, and I was getting cold. I was passing through a recently created stream and as I was walking through it, I slipped, and got wet. Now I was shivering cold and uncomfortably wet

All of a sudden a torrential rain broke out and completely soaked me. Yet instead of getting colder and wetter, I went with it. I was no longer concerned about being a bit wet, I was way beyond that. Meanwhile I had to pee for quite awhile and realized I could also let this go too as I couldn't be more wet. That moment of just surrendering to the rain, the cold, the whole wild situation – it was total freedom and pure bliss.

It was more than just letting go of what was holding me back physically. I had surrendered to the moment itself, embraced the pure madness and beauty of it. And it turned out to be the happiest moment of my life.

So when the weather or life gets too unpredictable, I just remind myself of that moment, letting go in the rain, and it helps me remember to embrace whatever comes with a smile. Sometimes, you just gotta let go and trust in the journey. Pretty da kine, yeah?

Mahalo for joining on this journey ... now to put on some dry (fabulous) clothes!
