Aloha LoveTribe,

First off I want to thank our LoveTribe ... you! One of our diverse loving, compassionate, stylin', creative and supportive community that has kept us here and brings support to each other. Thank-you for supporting us and small local businesses.

Although we are also offering online shopping it doesn't have the array of items the shops do. And we don't have the library vintage, recycled shop online though we have been selling some through Instagram.

There are usually so few (or no-one) in the shops that it is practically private shopping. Though, if you want private shopping (or a private date with a friend or family members), email us and we'll set it up before or after hours.

I'm working on my holiday gift for you all so stay tuned.

To see my message on the gift of a new ThanksGiving, it's at the end of this email.

Since Thanksgiving brings a reminder of the genocide of Native Peoples and the assault on their culture, I have a ritual contribution $ to honor and support our Native brothers and sisters' culture. You may want to adopt a similar ritual.

We have been finding new ways to work, play, connect, be with ourselves and with our communities. And now is a time to find new ways and new meanings of old rituals/holidays often based on patriarchy, consumerism and ideology of our separateness not from the awareness of our oneness.

So, Thanks-giving! The gift of 2020 Thanksgiving is to create new rituals for giving thanks, which will create more ease and joy as we learn to live in new ways.

When this challenge/adjustment is over (this too shall pass), some of our old ways we will keep while integrating new forms, and some old ways we will be grateful they are gone.

Yes, it's a stretch to be grateful for this year!! And to find gratitude across the new divide (and old complaints) of friends and family. They may not have the same points of view, they may not ... fill in the many blanks ... but they do have strengths and values that we can appreciate and that is the opportunity of these times. As we know, what we appreciate, appreciates. What we focus on grows. So giving thanks is a gift for us all, and grows our muscle of appreciation.

One suggestion (to inspire your creativity) is to make a list of friends, family and life situations. Put a word or a story of appreciation next to the name and/or situation. This can be done alone or with another/others. The list could be put on a personal altar or shared with family/friends on a Zoom Thanksgiving gathering (set up so maybe everyone would have a list to share). It could be put on facebook, inviting others to do the same. I look forward to hearing what your creativity and curiosity came up with that can have this Thanksgiving be a gift instead a of loss.

Keep breathing ...
keep living in DeLight,
we are living in mythic times.

Be Fearless - Choose Love

xoxo Devi
